Judy H. Davis named CNET Civilian of the Quarter

PENSACOLA, Fla.- Ms. Judy H. Davis has been selected as the Chief of Naval Education and Training "Civilian of the Quarter" for the Second Quarter of 1999. The selection of Ms. Davis for this distinction is a direct result of her exceptional job performance as a journeyman budget analyst for the Budget Formulation Branch of CNET's Operations and Support Division.

Ms. Davis has obtained this recognition via her superior work record in the most complex and varied position in the Budget Office. Her responsibilities encompass 15 separate and diverse funding areas that involve other training support programs that are a vital link to CNET's mission. Each program is varied and completely different from the next. Ms. Davis is the common link between each.

With her knowledge of budget and Navy finance, Ms. Davis is the first person program managers go to when they have a problem or need assistance. Her quick adaptability in this ever-changing world is impressive, and she is able to compromise with differing views while always getting her point across. As a member of the Y2K team and the headquarters point of contact on all Y2K budget matters, her expertise was key in providing an estimate of funding requirements on CNET's Y2K progress to the Department of the Navy Chief Information Office. She was also instrumental in the data call sent to CNET activities and worked with other CNET divisions to establish claimancy-funding requirements.

Ms. Davis spent countless hours helping to prepare for the first Claimancy-wide Comptroller's conference in over ten years. Her organizational skills enabled her to take charge of several aspects of the conference with ease.

She is a true "team player" and maintains a professional rapport with personnel at the Pentagon, CNET staff, and throughout Naval Education and Training Commands.
